Star Organs of Britain was begun in 2006 and is devoted to the best in organ photography. The aim is to seek out instruments which would remain obscure whether through location, provenance or simply because they have lain undiscovered. Considerable time and resources are devoted to researching organs and making arrangements for photography, so revealing many real treasures bequeathed to us by past benefactors.

Andrew Hayden, its creator, is well known for his historical feature articles in The Organ and Choir & Organ and as BIOS Casework Officer. Continuing in the great tradition of Andrew Freeman and Bernard Edmonds, his passion for the organ combines with an almost equal passion for photography, aiming to capture the beauty of the British organ in its home surroundings, a treasure store which is under threat through neglect due to changes in musical fashion and redundancy. All of the instruments you see are captured on film in large format guaranteeing the highest image quality together with the best possible degree of longevity for the future.

Your purchase and visit to the website will also assist the work of the British Organ Archive at Birmingham University since all images will eventually form part of the Archive's reference collections. Copies of the photographs may be obtained through the Photo Library section.
